

Chatbot Development

The chatbots have accomplished the usability test and evolved into a multifunctional life helpers. They create shortcuts to actions, break the ice in communication, and change the customer behaviors.

LinkedIn, Facebook, Telegram, Bank of America, eBay, Slack and many other have already integrated the chatbots in their online services.

For what? — To transform the vital aspects of routine business conduct by implementing chatbots that do the following tasks:

1. Support the customers and influence the buyer behavior
2. Simplify the scheduling and planning
3. Manage the relationships with customers
4. Collect feedback and interpret numbers

Slack CICD Chatbots

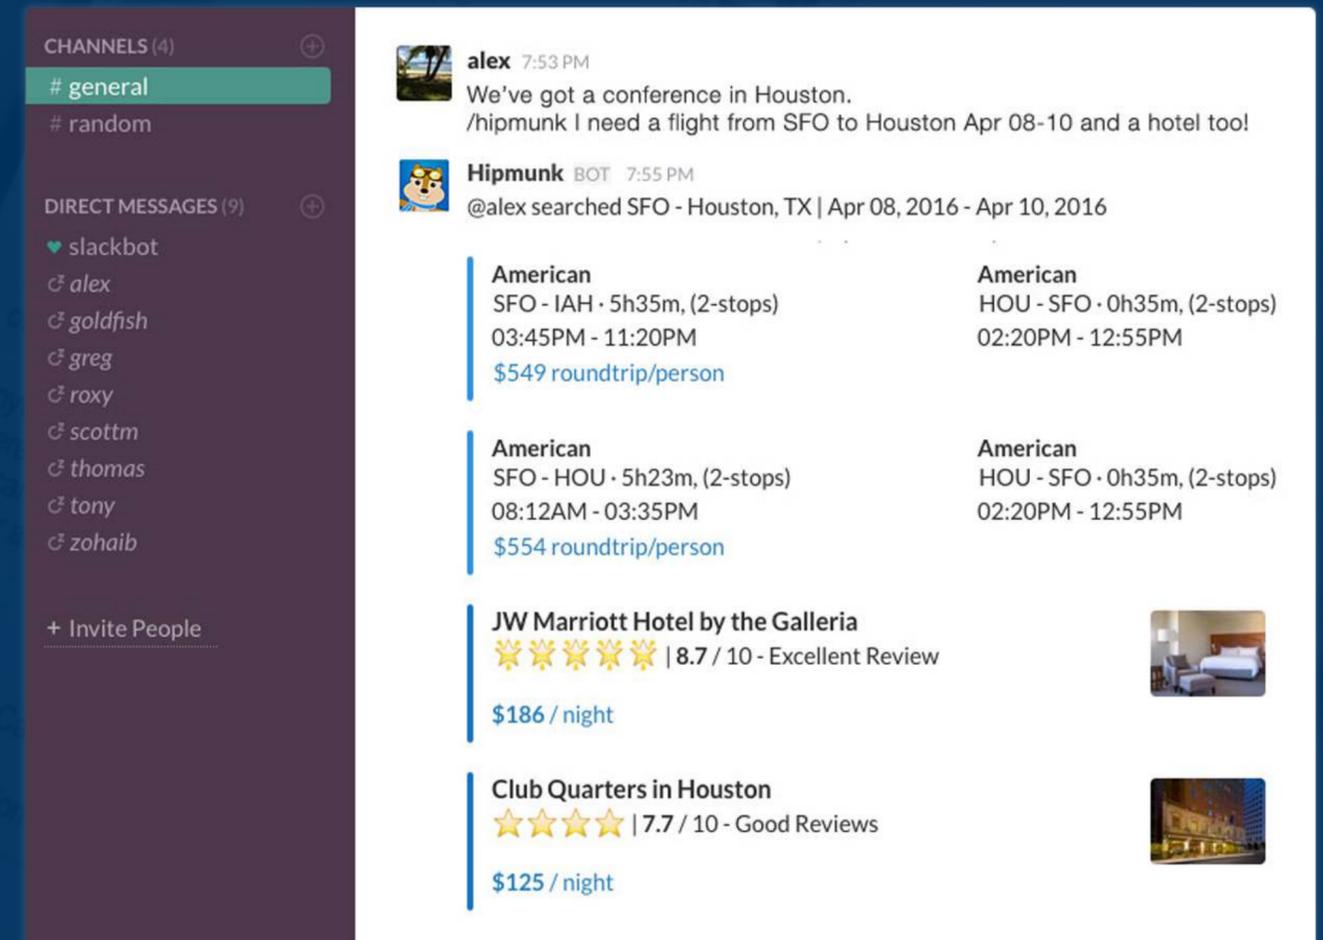

A chatbot is a cost-efficient personal online helper that knows the shortcuts for time-consuming routing processes such as planning, synchronizing the schedules in multiple planners.

Inoxoft crafts the chatbots that simplify and optimize the development processes by organizing the Continuous Integration Continuous Deployment (CICD).

The CICD is a vital service that eases the life of devops.

We drew inspiration from this and devised a chatbot that creates a shortcut: it uses a command written in Slack that gives an impulse to the Git and pushes the deployment delivering the flawless CICD.

Also, this chatbot could connect Slack with Jira and trigger actions.
